

SUBMITTED BY GARY KAPLAN, EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR OF JFYNetWorks, Boston, MA

The Boston Herald, in a special section on workplace diversity, featured a picture of JFYNetWorks' most recent green jobs placements. JFY is pleased to be working with Conservation Services Group, the state's largest energy efficiency company, to make the promise of green jobs a reality in Massachusetts. JFY is also grateful to the Barr Foundation for its support and to the Massachusetts Clean Energy Center for its Pathways Out of Poverty training grant. The picture was taken at CSG's training center in Westborough.

Landing Green Jobs

Two graduates of JFYNetWorks' environmental technology training program, Ellery Sanchez of Malden, seated left, and Samuel Yawson of Revere, seated right, were hired earlier this month by the Conservation Services Group as energy auditors – the first graduates of the new program whose aim is to achieve a more diverse work force, says JFYNetWorks Executive Director Gary Kaplan, standing left. Sanchez and Yawson are coached in the use of energy auditing software by CSG trainer Todd Miles, standing right.
